GPRA Thanksgiving Match October 29, 2024

Dear Great Pyrenees Friends,

We are off to a very slow start and recognize how difficult the financial environment is for many. If you are in the position to step up for GPRA, please consider a more substantial donation so we can take full advantage of the match. DONATE HERE

Below, you'll find Part 2 of Sabine's story from last week. As you'll recall, GPRA stepped in to attempt to rescue nine Great Pyrenees on a freezing cold New Year's Eve in Alabama.

New Year's Eve 2023 in Alabama, Part 2 - Our second trip to the rescue location in Alabama was on a cold and icy day, with the temperature hovering around 19 degrees. We packed an abundance of high-value treats with the hopes of being able to lure the adult dogs in. We headed out from Georgia at five in the morning so we could be there in time for the dogs' morning feeding.

We met up again with Kevin, Director of the Marshall County Animal Control, and Dave, a GPRA volunteer that lives in the area. Our main focus of the day was the mama dog. Unfortunately, none of her puppies survived, but we knew that she would likely need urgent medical care.

We arrived just in time for the feeding. The neighbor set up the food bowls for the four remaining dogs, and to our surprise, the mama dog came up to him. She was exhausted. We put her in the warm car first, with food and water to help her get her strength back.

We then tried to gain the trust of the remaining three dogs. That was not easy, and the freezing temperatures were not helpful. The dogs took treats if you tossed them, but as soon as we made a move toward them, they ran. We were sitting still to let them approach us, but it was simply too cold outside to do that for long.

Around noon, the neighbor brought water for the dogs. I started walking towards the gate in the backyard, leaving a trail of Vienna sausages behind me. We had tried everything, and trying to lure them inside the gate was my absolute last resort.

BINGO! Slowly, one after the other, the dogs followed my trail. Kevin was staying far behind the dogs until all three followed me into the backyard, and he closed the gate behind the last dog. At this point we had them in a smaller space, which was easier to work with. We were able to get a hold of the two younger females pretty quickly and we put them in the car with the mama dog, who was sleeping.

The big older male did not give up easily. He went up on the old rotten wood deck. Kevin did not hesitate and climbed up there to catch him, and he was successful! All dogs were captured safely and we started our drive back. It was late, and our partner vet clinic was closed by the time we would have arrived in Georgia.

That's why we decided to take the four to our house and let them spend the night in our foster area. The next day, we brought them to Animal Wellness Clinic in Milton where they had their intake appointments and got vaccines, heartworm tests, and fecal testing done. The mama dog received a very thorough exam as well, and she seemed to be very healthy.

Like the previous four dogs, we named the dogs we rescued that day after characters from the Sherlock Holmes series: Irene Adler, Mary Morstan, Miss Hudson (Mama dog), and Inspector Lestrade (Papa dog).

All four got along well and we continued fostering them. The two younger females were adopted out in the spring. The older very bonded pair, Miss Hudson and Inspector Lestrade, seemed very shut down and afraid of people. They were terrified of cars, and it took them several months to open up and trust us.

And what can I say – we foster failed the pair, and they will stay with us. After 10 months, Miss Hudson began playing and running in the backyard. It's just beautiful to see this transformation from a fearful and shut-down dog. Inspector Lestrade is never far from her and he is just as sweet and happy. They are a truly bonded pair ♥ We love happy endings!
